

ABSTRACT

This invention relates to a fabric designed to minimize shear forces. Through the use of overlapping, angled fibers, a low-friction material can be created that significantly reduces the chance of blistering. The fabric has both medical and recreational applications.